Extract of a Letter from the Hague, Auguſt 10. N. S.

IT appears plainly by every Step the Porte has taken, that it was ſorely againſt her Will to have a Rupture with Ruſſia. The Grand Signor has terrible Apprehenſions of ſome fatal Revolution in his Empire, having two powerful Enemies on his Back, whilſt an inteſtine Faction preys at the ſame Time on his Vitals. The Grand Vizier ſet out from Conſtantinople to head the Army againſt Ruſſia with a Pomp which would have become a Conqueror returning in Triumph from a Battle, with ſuch Acclamations the Troops likewiſe received him; but with all this Pageantry the Moment he got to his Tent he ſent for Sir Everard Fawkener, and Mr. Calkoen their High Mightineſſes Ambaſſador, and, without any reſerve, diſcloſed the State of the Ottoman Affairs to them, expreſſing the great Confidence he placed in his Britannick Majeſty and the States General, whom he conſidered as his only true and faithful Friends; that he accordingly implored the Mediation of the Two Powers, and to give them a Proof of his pacifick Intentions, and the Deſire he had to prevent all Effuſion of Blood, he would repoſe in their Hands the Deciſion of the Grievances on both ſides.

London, Aug. 1. On Monday laſt Thomas Reynolds was executed at Tyburn for a Riot in which he was an Actor at Ledbury. After he was cut down, the Wife of James Baylis, who had bought him a Coffin and Shroud with the Money he gave her the Day before his Execution, put him into a Coffin, and they digged a Grave nigh to the Place of his Execution, to which the Mob carried him; and as they were putting him into the Grave a Woman deſired a Sight of his Body; the Coffin being opened, he mov'd and Breath'd ſtrongly, and lifted his Hand to his Breaſt.

The Mob favouring him, leaſt the Officers ſhould take and execute him again, they carried the Coffin along the Oxford Road, and halting to ſee how he did, they found him ſtill alive, breathing ſtrongly, his Breaſt and Belly heaving up, and he often put his Hand to his Breaſt, but never open'd nor mov'd his Eyes.

A Surgeon drew Blood of him, and he bled freely and plentifully and vomited a good deal. They carried him by Paddington, and deſired them to take him into their Houſes, but nobody would receive him for fear of Trouble. They put Sack and Brandy into his Mouth, and us'd other Means to recover him, and a Man wrap'd him in his Coat to keep him warm; but they having thrown Water into the Coffin, and he put out of all Houſe and Harbour, after they had carried him out two Miles from Tyburn, they returned towards the Town, and by reaſon of Cold and other miſmanagements, he at laſt expired, and they dig'd another Grave by the Oxford-Road, and buried him.

As to the Accident which happen'd at his Execution, 'twas indeed very ſingular, but not ſo unaccountable as ſome People would make it, ſince ſuch as have but a very ſuperficial Notion of Anatomy, may eaſily conceive how a Perſon very ſoon cut down may ſhew even ſtrong Signs of Life, and yet be in no Condition to Recover. If this poor Man had fallen into the Hands of Surgeons inſtead of the Mob, it is very poſſible that he might have been ſaved, but amongſt ſuch rude Attendants as were about him, there is no wonder to be made that he expired, ſince the pouring Liquor down his Throat was certainly one of the fooliſheſt Things they could do, next to their omitting Bleeding and Rubbing.

In the Year 1650, one Ann Green was executed at Oxford, and after hanging the uſual Time, her Body was taken away, and being thought to have ſome Signs of Life in it, ſuch Methods were uſed as brought her to herſelf; ſhe lived many Years after, and gave a long diſtinct Account of what ſhe ſuffered from the Moment ſhe was turned off; this made such a Noise at the Time, that near forty of the Prime Wits of the University wrote Copies of Latin and English Verses on the Occasion; a circumstantial Account of the whole Affair was printed the next Year in a Quarto Pamphlet of three Sheets and a half, bearing the Title of News from the Dead in the Revival of Ann Green.

A latter Instance of this sort happened in Scotland, where a Woman was hanged for the Murder of her Bastard Child (which however she constantly denied, both before and after her Execution) was by the Care of her Friends brought to herself some Hours after she had been hang'd, and lived many Years in the Village of Musselburgh, where many People visited her, and gave her Money to hear her Story from her own Mouth.

Such Instances are very rare, and the Causes very difficult to be assigned, and therefore fitter to be left to the Judgement of the Reader, than to be farther insisted on in this Paper.

Aug. 21. The Imperial and French Generals continue their Conferences, disposing every Thing for the approaching Evacuation of the Milanese. The last Convention settled by the Emperor and his most Christian Majesty, is not yet made publick; but they give out with great Confidence, that Lorrain is to remain in Possession of its present Sovereign till the Death of the great Duke of Tuscany, that the latter Dutchy are to be garrison'd by a certain Number of Imperialists, and the former by the like Number of French, that after the King of Sardinia is put in Possession of the Countries assign'd him, and the Emperor of the Milanese, the Cession of the Dutchy of Barr shall be made to France, and Philipsburgh and Fort Kehl re-deliver'd to the Empire.

A short Introduction to the Riot at Edinburgh.

One Andrew Wilson being convicted in the High Court of Justiciary of Scotland, for a Robbery of the Publick Money committed on the High Way, was sentenced to Death for that Offence; and it being apprehended the Populace of the City of Edinburgh would Rescue the said Offender; On the Day appointed for his Execution, viz. the 14th of April last, Capt. John Porteous, one of the Captain Lieutenants of the Town-Guards of the City, lawfully Commissioned by the Magistrates and Town Council thereof, being ordered to attend at the said Execution to preserve the Peace and support the Executioner in the Discharge of his Duty, having a Detachment of the City Guard of Seventy Men under his Command; after the said Wilson had hung upon the Gallows for a considerable Time, till there was Ground to conclude he was dead, the Executioner went up the Ladder, when the Mob began to throw Stones, one of 'em hit the Executioner on the Face, and others fell among the Detachment or Guard, which so much exasperated Capt. Porteous, that he, and (by his Order,) others under his Command, without further Cause, fired among the Multitude, and killed and wounded Numbers of his Majesty's Subjects, the Inhabitants of the City of Edinburgh; for which, after a solemn Trial, he was found Guilty by the Verdict of the Assize on the 20th of July, and Sentence of Death pronounced against him by the Lords of Justiciary the same Day, That he should be taken from the Tolbooth of Edinburgh the 8th of September, to the Grass Market, the common Place of Execution, and there be hanged by the Neck upon a Gibbet until he be dead, &c. as appears by his Trial, too long to be inserted in our Print. Great Application was made to her most excellent Majesty, Guardian of these Realms, for changing the Sentence from Death to Transportation; and upon Porteous's Petition, a Reprieve was granted for Six Weeks, which arrived at Edinburgh some few Days before his Execution was to have been: The News of which being known among the People occasioned the Riot hereafter related at the Close of the said Tryal.

From Edinburgh, Sept. 12. 1736.

We hear, That a very extraordinary Tumult and Execution happened there last Tuesday the 7th Current. About 10 at Night, some Men, by Surprize, entered the City, seized all the Fire-Arms, Battle-axes, and the Drums belonging to the City-Guard. The Mob in a few Minutes lock'd and secur'd all the City Gates, and with Drums beat an Alarm, then attempted to force open with Hammers and other Instruments the Prison Door; but these failing, they set fire to it, and burnt it. When they entered the Prison, they called upon the Under-Keeper who was within, and made him open the double Locks of the Apartment where Capt. Porteous was; it had also a Bolt within, but was not bolted, so they had ready Access. He beg'd they would spare him till next Afternoon, but they refus'd his Request, and immediately hurried him away, which was about 11 o'Clock. When bro't out of Prison, he was heard to cry.

They then marched out with lighted Torches before them; In their way to the Grass-market, passing by a Barber's Sign-post, some called out to hang him up there, but it was resolved to hang him where the Murder was committed: so they proceeded to the Place that the Gallows used to be fixed on for Executions, where he was about a quarter of an Hour, till they opened a Shop and bro't out a Rope, one End of which they threw over a Sign-post, about 20 Feet high, belonging to a Dyer in the High-street, near the ordinary Place of Execution. He desired some Time to prepare for Death; but was answered, They would allow him no more than those who were shot. They then pulled him up in the Dress in which they found him, viz. a Night Gown and Cap. He having his Hands loosed, fixed them 'twixt his Neck and the Rope, whereupon one with a Battle-ax struck towards his Hands. They then let him down, and having on two Shirts, they wrap'd one of them about his Face, and tied his Arms with his Night Gown; then pulled him up again, where he hung next Morning till Day-light. When he was cut down and carried to the Grey-Friers Church. Upon inspecting his Body, it appeared his left Shoulder was wounded, his Back discoloured, and his Neck broke.

It was observ'd, that this Mob was under a stricter Concert and better conducted than usual; for as marching along to the Execution, Porteous observing a Gentleman of his Acquaintance, gave him a Purse of 23 Guineas, which he desir'd might be delivered to his Brother. They left the Prison doors open, and Liberty to the Prisoners to make their Escape; and after the Execution was over, they left the Arms and Drums on the Place of Execution, where they were found the next Morning. During the Tumult, Parties of armed Men with Drums, patroled in the different Streets, to prevent any Surprize from the King's Forces, quarter'd in the Suburbs. After the Execution was over, they went to the Lord Provost's House, and told him, they were satisfied, and so dismiss'd, without offering any other Violence.

There is one Circumstance mentioned by some, That in order to supply the want of Clergymen, they order'd two of the gravest of their Number to exhort him, as he went to the Place of Execution.

London, Sept. 25. A Proclamation was Published offering a Reward of 200 l. and his Majesty's Pardon to the Discoverers of any Person concerned in the Murder of Capt. Porteous, and for every Person so discovered and Convicted 200 l. more.

Extract of a Letter from a Gentleman in Antigua to his Friend in Boston, dated October 18. 1736.

---THIS Island is in a very great Confusion at present, about the Negroes rising in Battle against us, (the Plot happened to be found out just before it came to head) and therefore hope we shall find Means to prevent it; it was so far gone that they had all their Posts, and was to attack us the 30th of this Instant, by blowing up the Ball House, and then a great Army to come into Town to fight and devour Men Women and Children; but as GOD would have it, we have had all the Heads in Custody, and are every

every Day, as we find them Guilty, putting them to miserable Deaths, as I ſhall mention at the Foot of this Letter. We have been for this Fortnight, and are ſtill continually in Arms, expecting an Attack every Moment, and I believe will continue ſo for ſome Time.

The following is an Extract of another Letter from Antigua.

Sir, St. John's in Antigua, Oct 24. 1736.

HERE has been a general Stop to all Buſineſs, occaſioned by the happy Diſcovery of an accurſed Negroe Plot, which ſhould have been prepetrated on the 11th Inſtant, which was the Anniverſary of the King's Coronation, on which Day the General uſually gives a handſome Ball to the Gentlemen and Ladies of the whole Iſland, but was poſtponed till the 30th Inſtant, upon the Account of the Death of the General's Son at St. Chriſtophers ſome little time ago: This was the only Preſervative of all our Lives. The Plot was thus, viz. One Court, a Negro Man belonging to Thomas Kerby, Eſq; was the chief Perſon in this Affair: Tomboy, a Negroe Man belonging to Mr. Thomas Hanſton; Hercules, a Negroe Man belonging to Mr. John Chriſtophers: Theſe two were to have been this King Court's head Generals, and while the Gentlemen and Ladies were diverting themſelves at the Ball, which was to have been held at Mr. Chriſtopher Dunbar's new Houſe, they were to convey a great Quantity of Gunpowder into the Cellar, and blow the Houſe up; at the ſame time this King Court, Tomboy, and Hercules were to head a Party of Four Hundred Men each, one from the Eaſt End of the Town, one from Otter's Paſture, and one from Morgan's Paſture, all armed with Gutlaſhes, and to fall on all the Whites in the Town, Men, Women, and Children without Reſerve, at the ſame time the Houſe blew up, which was to be a general Signal to the other Parts of the Iſland, for they were to place themſelves (or at leaſt a Look-out) on ſeveral Eminencies, which, with a falſe Fire they were to make at each Place, was to convey the Signal through the Iſland, then the Negroes of each Plantation were to riſe and deſtroy all the Whites in their reſpective Diſtricts, and ſo have made themſelves ſole Maſters of the whole Iſland; How this happy Diſcovery was made is hardly to be accounted for, but ſome kind Hand of Providence induced the Magiſtrates to enquire more ſtrictly into their Proceedings than uſually they had done, for playing Dice, &c. which was contrary to the wholeſome Laws of this Iſland; they ſtill diſcovered more and more, 'till at laſt this Court, Tomboy, and Hercules, being ſuſpected for former Crimes and high Miſdemeanors, were taken up, and after ſome ſtrict Examination ſufficient Cauſe found to commit them, and ſtill more and more Evidences appearing againſt them, they were at length convicted. On the 19th Inſtant at Night, being laſt Tueſday, and the Day following, King Court was brought to the Place of Execution, there was laid extended on a Wheel, ſeized by the Wriſts and Ancles, and ſo laid basking in the Sun for the full Space of an Hour and a Quarter, or more, when he begged leave to plead, the Juſtices gave their Aſſent, when he acknowledged every thing that was alledged againſt him, and what his General Tomboy had confeſs'd in Priſon the ſame Morning, when he was aſſured his Time drew near for Execution: At laſt, about Noon Mr. King Court (for ſo they had actually made him, and bowed the Knee to him at a very great Feaſt they had, a little before the Day they intended to proſecute their accurſed Deſign) was broke on the Wheel, and his kingly Cap and Canopy was found in ſome Negroe's Poſſeſſion; ſince which Tomboy was broke on the Wheel on the Thurſday, and on Friday Hercules; their Bones were broke, and after that their Heads cut off and ſtuck up on a Pole of ſome conſiderable Heighth; and four more of theſe honeſt Gentlemen were burnt the ſame Day in Otter's Paſture, and to-morrow will be ſeven more, and ſo many as they can find leading Men into this Plot. This is all I can ſay to the Affair at preſent, only that it puts us all into the utmoſt Confuſion, and all our People are under Arms, and 'tis believed will continue ſo 'till after Chriſtmas.

BOSTON, Nov. 29.

We hear from Antigua, that in ſome Parts of that Iſland it is ſo dry that they have hardly any Water for Man or Beaſt, and the pooreſt Proſpect of a next Year's Crop as ever was known, and that the Planters won't make ſo much as will defray the Charges of their Eſtates, and that there will not be a Mill going till March or April.
